Blessing Exploitation

Posted by Gary L. Francione in Blog

Dear Colleagues:

If you promote being a "conscientious omnivore" as the "compassionate" choice, guess what? People will continue to eat animal products. They will continue to participate directly in animal exploitation and see nothing wrong with it. After all, the "experts," the "animal rights people" have blessed their consumption of animal products.

If you promote vegetarianism as the "compassionate" choice, you are giving people the green light to consume dairy and other animal products. That explains why we all know many vegetarians who have never gone vegan. Why should they when they are being told by the self-appointed experts that they have discharged their moral obligations to animals by being vegetarian?

If you regard animals as members of the moral community, you stop consuming them. Period. Its not a matter of "happy" exploitation; it is a matter of no exploitation.

If you are not a vegan, go vegan. It's easy, better for your health and the environment, and, most important, it's the morally right thing to do.
