

Ryan Flanagan Hey Dan, on a different topic... have you seen the Richard Dawkins and Peter Singer interview discussion debate . ? if you havent i highly recommend it, and also suggest it as grounds for a big move by you and other high brow vegan activists. I believe that the large numbers of Dawkins 'friends' have already thrown of the shackles of religious indoctrination, and them and Dawkins need to be publicly nudged in the right direction to give up their denial and follow up tje science and ethics by putting their ideas ideals and reason inline with their actions. Because as the Dawkins Singer video blatantly shows, theres no good excuse, theres no real reason, its just indoctrinated habit. and like religion is damaging backwards and outdated and needs to end, yesterday! 😊 also thanks for your work x

Samuel Álvarez Rodríguez There used to be a page here in FB called "Encourage Richard Dawkins to go vegan/Anima a Richard Dawkins a hacerse vegano" with thousands of likes! It's gone now it seems, but just so you know the idea is out there, Ryan. 😊

In any case, the topic of ... See More

Dan Cudahy Ryan,

I haven't seen the interview, but I'll take a look as time permits over the next few days or so.

As my friend Randy Sandberg has said "I'm an atheist because I don't believe in superior beings, and I'm a vegan because I don't believe in inferior ones either."

To religious people, I'd say treat nonhuman animals the way you would like to be treated by your god or supernatural power, which, for virtually everyone if they're honest, entails veganism.

To nonbelievers who aren't vegans, I'd say give your claims to secular morality more thought and importance in your life, because unless you're vegan, your claim to scientifically-informed, rational, secular morality has a blatant and indefensible absurdity to contend with. The only reason you get away with non-veganism culturally is because you live in a very prejudiced (read: irrational) society when it comes to the moral status of nonhuman animals.
